Industrial Education.

Hon, John E. Massey, State superintendent of public instruction, was in the city on Tuesday, having just returned from a trip to Massachusetts. He said that he had gone there to inquire into the minutize of the methods of industrial education in the Boston and other city schools. He was, he said, much pleased and got some valuable hints as to how the work is carried on along with the other lines of public school instruction, but saw nothing that equaled the system in use at the Miller Manual school, in Albemarle county, in efficiency.

Talking further of his plans, he stated that it was his desire to begin stated that it was his desire to begin gradually the introduction of industrial training in the city schools of Virginia and gradually extend it in scope and accommodations. The State was not able to adopt this valuable feature of school work generally or extensively as yet, but it would steadily expand. Mr. Massey said his idea was to start an industrial school in some city, say Richmond, to be run in some city, say Richmond, to be run in the afternoon. At first it would accom-modate only 20 or 30 pupils at one time, but that number of children from each school might spend an hour or two each week in this workshop school. In this way a number could be accommodated during each week.

When asked to what extent and in what lines the instruction would be, Mr. Massey stated that his aim was to familiarized boys with the use of all or-dinary tools, and familiar forms of manunal labor. Besides being of incalculable benefit to youths, it would be in the nature of mental relaxation and recreation and he thought the boys would

Being asked if it was desirable to adapt the instruction specially to each pupil, he stated that of course the bent of the pupil's mind in the mechanical line would be noted by both teacher and pupil.—Staunton News.
